

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

News	Notes
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Trump administration this week will announce a plan to cover the out-of-pocket costs of COVID-19 vaccines for millions of Americans who receive Medicare or Medicaid. Under the planned rule, Medicare and Medicaid will now cover vaccines that receive emergency use authorization from the Food and Drug Administration, which is a change from current policy. The regulations, which have been under development for weeks, are likely to be announced by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services on Tuesday or Wednesday. More to come.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Vice President Mike Pence’s chief of staff, Marc Short, tested positive for COVID-19 on October 24.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> HHS Secretary Alex Azar authored an op-ed published on October 22 in Fox Business on “Why Operation Warp Speed is a Made-in-America Story.” He discussed the progress made with Operation Warp Speed (OWS), noting the “unwavering leadership, ingenuity, determination, the commitment of enormous resources, exceptional logistical infrastructure, and public-private collaboration” required for this success. He praised public-private partnerships including in manufacturing, information technology and vaccinations. His full op-ed can be found here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> A federal judge on Wednesday, October 21 ordered the Department of Agriculture (USDA) to comply with his recent decision requiring the department to take up Pennsylvania’s bid to increase emergency food stamp payments to its lowest-income households during the pandemic. The dispute centers on how the USDA interpreted language in the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, H.R. 6201 (116), which boosted Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program payments during the public health emergency — an additional benefit known as an emergency allotment. After the September order, the Pennsylvania Department of Human Services submitted waiver requests to USDA’s Food and Nutrition Service seeking to send emergency allotments to households that are either at or near the maximum benefit levels. USDA has argued that despite this provision, households already receiving the maximum allowed monthly payment under the program during normal times do not qualify for more aid. The maximum monthly allotment for a family of four is currently $680.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Trump administration is considering cutting millions of dollars for coronavirus relief, HIV treatment, screenings for newborns and other programs in Democratic-led cities including New York, N.Y., Portland, Ore., Washington, D.C. and Seattle, Wash. The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has identified federal grants covering those services, which are among the nearly 200 health programs that could be in line for cuts as part of a sweeping government-wide directive the administration is advancing.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> As Congress continues to struggle to reach an agreement on COVID relief, which would include funds for businesses and possibly local governments, The Washington Post reports that there are billions of federal dollars still available. “In March, Congress allotted $454 billion to the Treasury Department to support the central bank’s emergency lending programs, including those for struggling businesses and local governments. Of that pot, only $195 billion has been specifically committed to cover any losses the Fed might take, including through loans that companies fail to repay.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

Seven months into the crisis, the remaining $259 billion still has not been committed to any of the Fed’s specific programs or for any other purpose, and it is unlikely that it will be anytime soon.” You can read the article here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • A federal judge struck down on October 19 a Trump administration rule that would have mandated tougher work requirements on millions of able-bodied adults without dependents who receive Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits. If implemented, the Department of Agriculture’s (USDA) rule would have dropped some 700,000 people from the program, per the department’s own pre-pandemic estimates. Anti-hunger advocates have cheered the decision. "It is an important ruling," said Ellen Vollinger, legal director at the Food Research & Action Center (FRAC). USDA can appeal the ruling.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The American Beverage Association joined 150 trade associations in sending a letter to President Trump urging him to rescind an executive order issued in September barring federal contractors and those who receive federal grants from implementing diversity training based on “divisive concepts.” You can read the letter here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Trump administration announced on October 16 a deal with CVS and Walgreens to administer a future coronavirus vaccine to seniors and staff in long-term care facilities free of charge.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • In other vaccine news, Pfizer, which has been working to develop a coronavirus vaccine, will not seek an emergency authorization for its coronavirus vaccine until after the election. Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla said on October 16 that the company may know whether its vaccine is effective by the end of October, but won’t have the safety data the FDA wants until at least the end of November. You can read Bourla’s letter here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin on October 11 called upon congressional leaders to vote on legislation allowing the federal government to spend unused Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) funds. Read the letter here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Department of Commerce announced Oct. 9 new tariffs on aluminum sheet from Bahrain, Brazil, Croatia, Egypt, Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Italy, Oman, Romania, Serbia, Slovenia, South Africa, South Korea, Spain, Taiwan and Turkey. Click here to read more.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • An internal Federal Emergency Management Agency memo said 34 White House staffers and "other contacts" have been infected with the coronavirus in recent days. The figure is 10 more than 24 staffers previously reported, though the memo did not specify the nature of the “other contacts.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump tweeted Oct. 6 that he would be willing to sign legislation that would grant targeted aid, even after calling off talks with Democratic leadership. Following up on the sentiment, White House chief of staff Mark Meadows said Oct. 7 that he and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin were considering a stimulus measure aimed at distributing checks to Americans while providing aid to airlines and small businesses. However, Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., has rejected such piecemeal proposals in past weeks. Speaker Pelosi expressed openness last week to passing a stand-alone airline aid bill. House Republicans blocked it.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Stephen Miller, a top Trump aide, tested positive for COVID-19 yesterday. He joins First Lady Melania Trump, press secretary, campaign manager, party chair, counselor and numerous other staffers who have tested positive for coronavirus.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Donald Trump announced during the afternoon of October 5 via Twitter that he will leave Walter Reed National Military Medical Center at 6:30pm ET to return to the White House.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Donald Trump announced on Twitter that he and the first lady tested positive for COVID-19. They both report experiencing mild symptoms. The vice president tested negative this morning according to his press secretary.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump announced on September 28 that the federal government will ship 100 million rapid coronavirus tests to states by the end of the year. The rapid tests, made by Abbott Laboratories, cost $5 per test and can be analyzed in 15 minutes without the use of laboratory equipment. The first shipments, totaling 6.5 million tests, will be sent this week, and the amount each state receives will be based on population. Governors will be in charge of deciding how to use the rapid tests.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump announced on September 26 his nomination of Judge Amy Coney Barrett for the Supreme Court vacancy. Barrett was confirmed by the Senate in 2017 to serve on the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals and clerked for the late Justice Antonin Scalia.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On Sept 16., President Donald Trump called on Republicans to “go for the much higher numbers” in the next COVID-19 relief package. Additionally, he signaled openness to supporting a $1.5 trillion proposal from the bipartisan Problem Solvers Caucus that includes a second round of stimulus checks, among other things.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Office of the United States Trade Representative (USTR) announced Sept. 15 that the United States will resume duty-free treatment of non-allowed, unwrought Canadian aluminum retroactive to September 1, 2020. Read more here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Trump administration is working to finish a new vaccine tracking system. The Vaccine Administration Management System is the latest big health data project the administration has launched. The effort, funded by an almost $16 million sole-source contract, would help public health officials schedule COVID-19 immunizations and manage vaccine supplies. However, states already have information systems called vaccine registries, that perform the same basic functions and can help doctors see what shots patients already have. But the Trump administration believes that the scope of the pandemic requires new infrastructure to cover all the providers who might be involved in the response.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On Sept. 14, the Federal Government will stop conducting enhanced screening of passengers on inbound international flights for COVID-19. The screens have been held at select airports since January, when the first cases of the disease began to emerge. All screenings and rerouting of select international flights will cease at exactly 12:01 a.m. on Monday, Sept. 14.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The U.S. Agency for International Development, which has been on the front lines of the battle with the coronavirus, will shut down the task force it set up to tackle the still-ongoing pandemic on Sept. 9.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Donald Trump signed a memorandum on Sept. 2 ordering a review of funding of Democratic-run cities, specifically New York, Portland, Seattle and Washington, D.C., that have been epicenters of a wave of protests demanding racial justice, saying so-called “anarchist jurisdictions” should be disfavored for federal money. The document calls on the White House Office of Management and Budget to detail within two weeks how all federal agencies will submit reports detailing funding to those four cities. Read the executive order here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows stated that “progress has been made” in COVID relief package talks and even said he expects to see a paired down package on the Senate floor during the week of September 7. He also said the White House is advocating only about $150 billion in state aid while House Democrats are asking for $1 trillion. Other provisions could include money for schools, COVID-19 testing and unemployment insurance. However, until, and unless, House Democrats agree to more formal negotiations, a vote in the Senate won’t accomplish much.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows drew his line in the sand on a new coronavirus relief bill, saying yesterday the Trump administration is sticking firm with its $1.3 trillion offer as talks with Democratic leadership remain at an impasse.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said no deal was reached on Aug. 27 after White House Economic Adviser Larry Kudlow said the Trump administration would be willing to compromise with Democrats on a new coronavirus relief package, as both sides refused to budge from the price tag for the deal.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Donald Trump plans to unveil a major expansion of rapid coronavirus testing on Aug. 27, according to three individuals familiar with the upcoming announcement. Trump will announce that the administration has struck a $750 million deal to acquire 150 million tests from Abbott Laboratories, which the individuals said are set to be deployed in nursing homes, schools and other areas with populations at high risk.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows said on August 26 that he is not optimistic about reaching a new coronavirus relief deal before the end of September, predicting House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., will use the government funding cliff at the end of next September as leverage to strike a deal on pandemic aid. In response, Drew Hamill, Speaker Pelosi’s deputy chief, told reporters, “Democrats have compromised in these negotiations. We offered to come down $1 trillion if the White House would come up $1 trillion. We welcome the White House back to the negotiating table but they must meet us halfway.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Vice President Mike Pence held a call during the week of August 17 with the nation’s governors on the COVID-19 response and best practices. The call covered efforts to limit the spread of the virus, the administration’s support for nursing homes, CDC’s guidance on encouraging schools to safely reopen and supporting states’ efforts at protecting the most vulnerable citizens. See the readout here.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump is expected to stop by the Republican National Convention site in Charlotte on Aug. 24 during a trip to North Carolina. He is also planning to visit a site packaging food boxes for families, which is part of the administration’s response to the coronavirus pandemic.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Nearly 20% of Americans with children at home in July couldn’t afford to adequately feed their families, up from 17% in early June, according to Census figures. The numbers are expected to rise now that some government benefits have expired.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump tweeted on August 14 to express support of state and local aid to “save jobs for police, fire fighters, first responders and teachers.” You can read the tweet here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Details on the administration's payroll tax cut deferral continue to be ironed out as many questions were raised on implementation of the policy upon its announcement. The executive order defers withholding of the employee portion of Social Security payroll taxes of 6.2 percent from paychecks from Sept. 1 to Dec. 31. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Aug. 12 that it will be optional for employers to withhold employee payroll taxes, recognizing that some small businesses may prefer to not defer the tax payments. The administration has the authority to defer the payments, but only Congress can forgive the tax (which it has not done). The Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department are expected to release guidance on implementation of the deferral, including how the tax would be collected at the end of deferral period without congressional action to forgive the tax liability. Questions also remain in certain situations where employees leave jobs during the deferral period.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump is considering new immigration rules that would allow border officials to temporarily block an American citizen or legal permanent resident from returning to the United States from abroad if the authorities have reason to believe the person may be infected with the coronavirus. According to the New York Times, “[A] draft regulation would modify that effort by expanding the government’s power to prevent entry by citizens and legal residents in individual, limited circumstances. Federal agencies have been asked to submit feedback on the proposal to the White House by Tuesday, though it is unclear when it might be approved or announced.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump is expected to sign his executive orders as early as the evening of Aug. 7 to attempt to stop collecting the payroll tax, extend enhanced unemployment benefits, halt student loan payments and put in place an eviction moratorium.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Donald Trump told reporters on August 6 that an executive order to cut payroll taxes could come as early as August 7.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • While all other states and territories will have to cover 25% of their National Guard costs starting later in August, President Trump exempted Texas and Florida. The decision to fully fund the Guard deployments was hailed by officials in Texas and Florida on August 4, but also prompted accusations from others of an ulterior motive. The White House declined to comment publicly on the funding disparity. The states in question also did not offer an explanation as to why their costs alone will be fully covered.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • NIAID Director Dr. Anthony Fauci joined on August 5 POLITICO’s ‘Pulse Check’ podcast on and shared that another lockdown isn’t necessary for the nation to survive COVID. He stated, “There seems to be a misperception that either you shut down completely and damage a lot of things, mental health, the economy, all kinds of things, or let it rip and do whatever you want... There’s a stepwise fashion that you can open up the economy successfully. You don’t have to lock down again, but everybody has got to be on board for doing these five or six fundamental public health measures like masks and social distancing.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin told reporters on Aug. 4 that if there were a deal to be had on COVID-19 relief, it would have to be reached by Friday. Congressional leaders seem less optimistic.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump extended the federal deployment of nearly 25,000 National Guard members detailed to coronavirus relief efforts until the end of 2020 but ordered states to start picking up 25% of the tab, which is millions per month at a time states are struggling financially. Though many states are reporting record cases and hospitalizations amid a resurgence of the virus, the memorandum released Monday night says the decrease in financial support comes "as the United States transitions to a period of increased economic activity and recovery in those areas of the Nation where the threat posed by COVID-19 has been sufficiently mitigated.” The decision came after the National Governors Association criticized the administration for “unnecessary delays,” that were creating “significant challenges for states and territories, which are amplified in the middle of a crisis.” Federal support for the National Guard’s work had been set to end on August 21, meaning states would pull Guard members off the front lines by August 7 to quarantine for two weeks before returning home. Yet even with the extension, it is not clear states will be able to shoulder their part of the financial burden without more federal help.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Federal Pandemic Unemployment Compensation (FPUC) providing an additional $600 per week in unemployment benefits for those who lost their jobs due to the pandemic expired on July 31.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM), the National Retail Federation (NRF) and other trade groups suing the Administration over visa restrictions imposed by President Donald Trump in June have asked a federal court for a preliminary injunction. Trump’s policy will cause “specific, acute and irreparable” harm to the members of the trade groups if an injunction isn’t granted, the trade groups’ lawyers argued on July 31 in a motion.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On July 29, President Donald Trump and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin suggested in remarks outside the White House that the Administration would be open to passing a short-term extension on unemployment benefits and a moratorium on evictions. The additional unemployment benefits are set to expire July 31, and the moratorium on evictions expired the weekend of July 25.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Director Dr. Anthony Fauci said an experimental COVID-19 vaccine being developed by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and Moderna might have results by November. The public-private partnership to develop the vaccine moved into a crucial stage on July 27 with the start of a Phase 3 clinical

trial that aims to enroll 30,000 people around the country. NIH Director Francis Collins said three more potential vaccines which also part of the administration’s Operation Warp Speed effort may soon enter the final phase of testing.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Trump administration has renewed the public health emergency for the coronavirus. This will ensure critical resources are available to continue to fight the pandemic. The public health emergency declaration gives the Administration additional flexibilities to waive certain requirements for providers and states. The current declaration was set to expire July 25. Public health emergencies last for 90 days, so the latest renewal will expire in late October without another extension.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • White House Coronavirus Task Force Coordinator Dr. Deborah Birx privately told a group of state and local health officials on July 22 about a concerning rise in coronavirus cases in 12 cities. "There are cities that are lagging behind, and we have new increases in Miami, New Orleans, Las Vegas, San Jose, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Nashville, Pittsburgh, Columbus and Baltimore, so we're tracking this very closely. We're working with the state officials to make sure we're responding together, but when you first see that increased test positivity, that is when to start the mitigation efforts," Birx said during the call.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump held on July 22 the first coronavirus task force briefing since April. During the briefing, he reversed his rhetoric on mask wearing, urging Americans to wear a mask and saying masks “have an impact.” President Trump also shared developments on vaccines and therapeutics but warned a surge in cases may be coming soon. He said, “It will probably unfortunately get worse before it gets better.” He urged Americans to wear masks, avoid crowded bars and “be smart.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Trump administration is still pushing for a payroll tax cut in the next economic rescue package, but Republican leaders aren’t crazy about the idea as they begin stimulus negotiations with Democrats. On the other hand, the White House and GOP are more united on cutting unemployment insurance payments.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump told reporters on July 20 that he will resume giving regular coronavirus briefings this week, beginning on Tuesday at 5 p.m. It would mark his first time participating in a coronavirus briefing since late April. Trump signaled the briefings would be heavily focused on the development of a vaccine and drugs to treat the virus, which has advanced significantly since he last held regular media sessions on the pandemic.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on July 20 that Republicans view $1 trillion as their starting point for the upcoming negotiations on coronavirus relief legislation. "We're focused on starting with another trillion. We think that will make a big impact. The focus is ... really about kids and jobs and vaccines," Mnuchin told reporters at the White House.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The U.S. Chamber of Commerce sent a letter to President Donald Trump, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., this morning laying out what it would like to see in the coronavirus legislation that Congress is preparing to hash out. The trade group’s first ask is unsurprising—liability reform. The Chamber also asked Congress to make a variety of changes to the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP), including

extending the deadline and making the loans available to trade groups; to shore up the Economic Injury Disaster Loan program; to bolster the Employee Retention Credit; to set aside money to help schools reopen safely; to extend federal unemployment benefits passed in March but pare them down from the current amount of $600 a week; and to provide help to state and local governments, which Democratic lawmakers have championed for months. Read the letter here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • ABA joined today with a group of other trade associations, led by The Beer Institute, on a letter to The White House urging that the federal government not impose additional tariffs, or institute quotas, on aluminum imported from Canada. The group noted the financially disastrous impact tariffs or quotas would have on American manufacturers of all sizes, many of whom are already struggling due to the effects of COVID-19. You can read the letter here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Trump administration is planning to extend restrictions barring non-essential travel across the Mexican and Canadian borders until at least late August as coronavirus cases and deaths continue to spike in the U.S. and Mexico. The U.S., in separate agreements with Mexico and Canada, will make a formal announcement before July 21 that non-essential travel will be restricted for at least another 30 days.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Senior Trump administration officials have begun signaling their willingness to approve a narrow extension of the enhanced unemployment benefits helping tens of millions of jobless Americans hurt by the coronavirus pandemic. There is little appetite among the Senate GOP for an extension of these benefits.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • First Lady Melania Trump took to social media on July 14 to urge Americans to wear face coverings and maintain social distancing amid the coronavirus pandemic.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On July 9, Dr. Anthony Fauci, the nation's top infectious disease expert, said hard-hit states should not be moving forward with reopening but stopped short of calling for full shutdowns. "I would think we need to get the states pausing in their opening process, looking at what did not work well and try to mitigate that," Fauci said. "I don't think we need to go back to an extreme of shutting down." Fauci struck a different note than he did a day earlier in an interview with The Wall Street Journal when he said states should consider shutdowns. "I think any state that is having a serious problem, that state should seriously look at shutting down," he said on July 8. On July 9, though, he softened his remarks, saying, "I would hope we don't have to resort" to shutdowns, as they "would not be viewed very favorably." He pointed to California, Arizona, Texas and Florida as accounting for 50% of new positive cases.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) reminded taxpayers on July 8 that individuals who took advantage of the People First Initiative tax relief and did not make previously owed tax payments between March 25 to July 15 need to restart their payments. As the IRS continues to reopen its operations across the country, taxpayers who were in payment agreements and skipped any payments from March 25 and July 15 should start paying again to avoid penalties and possible default on their agreements. IRS Commissioner Chuck Rettig said, "As we resume a phased-in approach to our normal operations, we are sympathetic to the many Americans still suffering COVID-related hardships and stand ready to continue offering help to those who need it."

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Vice President Mike Pence and U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar suggested to governors that the Trump administration will extend the coronavirus public health emergency before it expires later this month. In a private call between White House Coronavirus Task Force officials and state leaders, Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan raised the issue of the expiring public health emergency. Azar said it was likely the emergency would be renewed, but stopped short of a firm commitment. Pence said state leaders should be "at ease" that an extension of the declaration is in the works. Public health emergencies must be renewed by HHS every 90 days, and the coronavirus declaration is set to expire July 25. The emergency was first issued in January, shortly after the coronavirus emerged in China, and was renewed in late April.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • A senior administration official confirmed that the White House has officially withdrawn the United States from the World Health Organization (WHO). The U.S. notice of withdrawal was submitted yesterday to the United Nations Secretary-General, and will be effective on July 6, 2021.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • According to new research based on Census Bureau data and conducted by economists at Northwestern University, nearly four in ten Black and Hispanic households with children are struggling to feed their families during the coronavirus pandemic. The percentage of families considered food insecure has surged across all groups and is already much higher than during the depths of the Great Recession. Read the study here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On June 5, Labor Secretary Eugene Scalia was on Fox News Sunday with Mike Emanuel and reiterated the Administration’s stance against enhanced unemployment benefits—“In terms of the unemployment benefit, it was a really important thing to do as we were shutting our economy down, Americans across the country were basically being told – and we needed to take measures, but they were basically being told you can't go to work right now. And so, we needed that substantial unemployment benefit. But, you know, there are some states where you can get on an annual basis, $75,000 a year right now on unemployment. And I think as we reopen the economy, I don't know that we need a benefit like that.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • During the week of June 30, the Department of Transportation (DOT), Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) released guidance for airlines and airports to combat the spread of COVID-19. The guidance aims to provide greater consistency with recommendations, as so far, airlines and airports were making their own recommendations to travelers. The guidance says the measures outlined in the document “should be implemented as soon as feasible.” It strongly encourages everyone to wear a mask or face covering and recommends airlines and airports make them available to people who do not have them. The guidance says airlines “should consider the feasibility of limiting seat availability to enable passengers to maintain social distance from each other during the flight.” When a flight starts to fill up, the airline should tell passengers and give them “alternative flight options, such as a flight change, without penalty.” The guidance recommends airlines use health self-declarations, saying they “encourage passengers to pause and make an honest evaluation of their health status prior to flight.” The guidance is available here.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Director Dr. Anthony Fauci indicated he would “settle” for a COVID-19 vaccine that is 70 to 75% effective, but this level of protection, coupled with the fact many Americans say they will not get a coronavirus vaccine, makes it unlikely the country will achieve herd immunity. Herd immunity occurs when enough people are immune to an infectious disease, either through prior illness or vaccination, so spread from person to person is unlikely. A recent poll found one-third of Americans indicate they would not get a COVID-19 vaccine even if it was affordable and widely available.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> For the first time in more than five weeks, the White House Coronavirus Task Force held on June 26 a briefing to discuss current Administration efforts to combat the spread of the coronavirus. Present at the briefing were: Vice President Mike Pence; Ambassador Dr. Deborah Birx, the coronavirus response coordinator; Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases; Health and Human Services (HHS) Secretary Alex Azar; and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) Director Robert Redfield. The Administration focused on the increase in infections in sunbelt states, which the Administration attributes to individuals under 40 increasingly getting tested and asymptomatic individuals finding out they are infected. The Administration further focused on federal efforts to mitigate spread, treat infected individuals and continue the search for a vaccine. Vice President Pence also noted all 50 states and territories are now reopening safely and responsibly.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> With Texas seeing increased numbers of COVID-19 outbreaks in several parts of the state, the Administration reversed its decision to wind down federal testing facilities in Texas at the request of Gov. Greg Abbott and U.S. Sens. John Cornyn and Ted Cruz. HHS Assistant Secretary Brett Giroir, the appointed COVID-19 testing czar, said HHS will continue funding the Texas sites for two weeks past the previously planned June 30 end date. The federal government is still set to end funding for federal testing sites in six sites across four states – Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Illinois and Colorado.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Operation Warp Speed is organizing a test in monkeys of an oral coronavirus vaccine as part of the effort to accelerate the development of COVID-19 drugs and vaccines. The vaccine’s manufacturer, Vaxart, announced its participation in the government-funded trial. The animals in the study will be given the oral vaccine and then exposed to the coronavirus to see if they are protected from infection. Operation Warp Speed leaders have said the program will ultimately select a total of seven vaccine candidates to speed development.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Department of Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue and Food & Drug Administration Commissioner Stephen Hahn released a joint statement yesterday that stated there is “no evidence that people can contract COVID-19 from food or from food packaging,” and that moves by some countries to restrict food exports are “not consistent with the known science of transmission.” Read the statement here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The federal government is transitioning 13 COVID-19 testing sites to “more efficient and effective” state-managed testing operations, according to Admiral Brett Giroir, who is leading the Administration’s COVID-19 testing efforts. Seven sites are in Texas, which is experiencing record numbers of confirmed coronavirus cases and hospitalizations.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

Dallas' Director of Emergency Management Rocky Vaz stated the city asked the federal government for an extension of funding past June 30 but was denied. Giroir indicated the government is still supporting increased testing capacity through a federal bundled payment program for retail pharmacies setting up testing sites. HHS added that governors can also use CARES Act funding to maintain operations at the testing sites.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On June 23, the Trump administration released guidance on insurance coverage on COVID-19 tests. The guidance, prepared by the Department of Health & Human Services, the Department of Labor and the Department of the Treasury, said plans must cover tests for people with COVID-19 symptoms or when a clinician says it is “medically appropriate.” Health insurers do not have to cover coronavirus surveillance tests or diagnostics to clear employees to go back to work. The industry says paying for widespread testing that is not medically necessary will drive the costs up and affect premiums. The guidance also confirms health plans will have to fully cover facility fees and any other services supplied to determine if patients should be tested - including respiratory panel tests, flu tests, X-rays and X-ray reading. The guidance is available here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> There are reports that the Trump administration has been considering scaling back the national emergency declared earlier this year to control the pandemic. This has raised concerns among public health leaders, physicians, hospital officials and others who fear that would make it more difficult for state and local governments and health systems to keep the coronavirus in check. When asked on June 23, White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany said no such move was imminent. She said, “I just spoke with the president, and he said we are not looking at lifting the national emergency declarations.” Several industry officials have said the Administration has indicated that lifting emergency declarations was being considered. A Department of Health & Human Services (HHS) spokesperson said, “At this time, HHS expects to renew the Public Health Emergency (PHE) due to COVID-19 before it expires. We have already renewed this PHE once.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Three-fourths of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services workforce — more than 13,000 employees — could be told as soon as June 24 that they face extended furloughs starting August 3.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On June 24, Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) employees have the option to return to the office as the agency begins Phase 1 reopening of its Washington headquarters. EPA Spokesperson James Hewitt said employees "are encouraged to continue teleworking" while in Phase 1. "We do expect members of EPA's political leadership team to return to the office and those returning should follow CDC guidelines to ensure a safe work environment," he added. The reopening also applies to the EPA's satellite office in Arlington, Va. Phase 1 will last at least two weeks, after which agency leadership will decide whether to move on to the next step.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump is expected to extend through the end of 2020 foreign worker restrictions that were initially enacted in April due to COVID-19. The President will expand on the Executive Order blocking most people from receiving a permanent residency visa, or green card, by including most guest workers who come to the United States for temporary or seasonal work. However, the new order is expected to continue to have broad exemptions, including for

healthcare professionals and those entering for law enforcement or national security reasons, which will be expanded to include those with economic interests. Foreign visitors from China, Europe, Brazil, Canada and Mexico have already been restricted, and most routine visa processing and refugee cases have been paused.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On June 21, White House Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Peter Navarro said in an interview that the White House is working to prepare for the possibility of a second wave of COVID-19 this fall. He indicated the Administration is filling the stockpile and doing everything it can to prepare for a possible influx of cases. Navarro’s announcement comes as virus numbers in the United States are on the rise. Nationwide, cases went up 15% over the last two weeks and cases are rising in 18 states across the South, West and Midwest. At least four states announced record-breaking numbers of new cases over Father’s Day weekend.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Small Business Administrator Jovita Carranza hosted Governors Pete Ricketts, R-Neb., and Kevin Stitt, R-Okla., at the White House this afternoon for a roundtable discussion with four small business owners about the reopening of America's small businesses.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On June 16, the Trump administration announced the coronavirus vaccine will be provided free of charge to Americans who cannot afford it.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> In an interview on June 14, Dr. Anthony Fauci, a leading member of the White House Coronavirus Task Force and the director of the National Institutes of Health’s (NIH) National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID), predicted that something resembling normal life in the United States would likely return in a year or so, adding that social distancing and other mitigation efforts would be necessary to control the pandemic through the fall and winter. He also indicated many states are reporting infections are higher than they were previously as several states begin to reopen and try to return to normal.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Over the weekend of June 13, White House Trade Adviser Peter Navarro signaled that in the next relief package currently being considered President Donald Trump is looking for at least $2 trillion to help buoy an economy devastated by the coronavirus pandemic. The White House also would like to see a “critical” payroll tax cut and a focus on bringing manufacturing jobs back to the U.S. in any further relief bill.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Center for American Progress released a report saying those who kept the nation fed and the skeletal economy running during the worst of the global pandemic, are also those most likely to depend upon SNAP in order to feed their own families. The report found that nearly 14 percent of grocery store workers and 12 percent of those working in agriculture reported using SNAP benefits at some point in 2018, the year in which the data were gathered.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The United States is expected to have a supply of at least 180 million N95 respirator masks each month from August through October, exceeding the estimated need of approximately 160 million for that period. The projections, created by the White House Supply Chain Task Force and released by the office of Senator Maggie Hassan, D-N.H., also estimate

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Assistant Secretary for Preparedness and Response at the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) Dr. Robert Kadlec indicated on June 8 that the U.S. supply of the COVID-19 treatment, remdesivir, is on pace to run out at the end of the month. He added that manufacturer Gilead Sciences is scheduled to send the government a final shipment the week of June 29, but after that, the agency is unsure when it will get more. The federal government received over 600,000 vials of the drug in early May, which it planned to use over six weeks on 78,000 patients in the hardest-hit states. Kadlec added the Administration is working with Gilead to overcome supply chain challenges to obtain raw materials for manufacturing the drug.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> During the June 5 signing ceremony of H.R. 7010 (116), which provides more flexibility to the Paycheck Protection Program (PPPR), President Donald Trump told those present that the administration will be pursuing several policies in the next COVID-19 legislation package, including a payroll tax cut, more stimulus money and additional aid for the restaurant and entertainment industries.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> A senior Administration official said President Trump is planning to meet with his senior advisers as soon as prior to the end of the week of June 1 to discuss policy options for the next coronavirus relief package as the administration prepares for negotiations with Capitol Hill.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Trump administration has said businesses can make diagnostic coronavirus tests and temperature checks a condition for returning to work. However, the administration has not yet answered key questions like when, or how often, to test workers or whether there should be a blanket testing policy for job seekers. Employers worried about this approach are asking Congress to give them broad legal protections in case workers or customers contract COVID-19.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Brett Giroir is stepping down as the coronavirus testing czar and returning to his regular job at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) later this month. HHS said he'll still be involved with testing work.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On May 29, President Donald Trump announced that the U.S. will terminate its relationship with the World Health Organization (WHO), which he has alleged is under Chinese control and failed to provide accurate information about the spread of the coronavirus.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> As of May 28, White House officials have decided not to release updated economic projections this summer, opting against publishing forecasts that would almost certainly codify an administration assessment that the coronavirus pandemic has led to a severe economic downturn. Traditionally, the White House unveils a federal budget proposal every February and then typically provides a 'mid-session review' in July or August with updated projections on economic trends such as unemployment, inflation and economic growth. Budget experts say they are not aware of any previous White House opting against providing forecasts in this 'mid-session review' document in any other year since at least the 1970s.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On May 19, the White House issued an Executive Order directing federal agencies to aid businesses by “rescinding, modifying, waiving, or providing exemptions from regulations and other requirements that may inhibit economic recovery.” The Executive Order also directed agencies to ensure businesses, especially small businesses, have the confidence necessary to reopen by providing clear guidance and recognizing the efforts of businesses to comply with often-complex regulations. Read more about the executive order here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Administration released its “COVID-19 Strategic Testing Plan” to Congress on May 24 as required by law. The 81-page document is prepared by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) and holds individual states responsible for planning and carrying out all coronavirus testing. According to the report, the federal government’s role is to “enable innovation, help scale supplies, and provide strategic guidance,” while states, territories and tribes are ultimately responsible for setting and meeting testing goals, with some help from private companies.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump signed on May 20 an executive order directing federal agencies to address the current economic emergency by “rescinding, modifying, waiving, or providing exemptions from regulations and other requirements that may inhibit economic recovery.” The order also encourages agencies to recognize the “efforts of businesses to comply with often-complex regulations in complicated and swiftly changing circumstances” and commit “to fairness in administrative enforcement and adjudication.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> At a White House briefing on the food supply chain on May 19, President Donald Trump announced the details of the United States Department of Agriculture’s (USDA) Coronavirus Food Assistance Program, including $16 billion in direct payments split between compensation for losses of both specialty and non-specialty crops in the first four months of the year as well as compensation through the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Trump and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin sent positive signals during a May 18 meeting with restaurant industry leaders seeking changes to the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP), which includes strict rules about how small businesses are allowed to use the emergency loans. Some of these changes include the ability to spend more of the loan money on non-payroll expenses and a “technical fix” with regard to the eight-week window to spend PPP loan funds.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump met on May 18 with members of the restaurant industry at a roundtable meeting at the White House to discuss the impact of COVID-19. Attendees included chefs and other restaurant executives, as well as representatives of the Independent Restaurant Coalition, a group organized during the pandemic to represent the interests of independent restaurants around the country. The coalition’s leadership includes José Andrés, Sam Kass, Andrew Zimmerman and Tom Colicchio.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump formally announced on May 15 the appointment of Moncef Slaoui as chief advisor and General Gustave Perna as chief operating officer of Operation Warp Speed (OWS), the Administration's national program to accelerate development, manufacture and distribution of COVID-19 vaccines, therapeutics, and diagnostics. OWS aims to have large quantities of an effective vaccine available by January 2021.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On May 14, the White House issued a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) opposing the HEROES Act. The SAP outlined White House priorities for future additional legislation – “a payroll tax holiday, safe-harbor provisions to protect businesses from frivolous lawsuits, permitting reform to facilitate infrastructure projects, and other policies to spur our economic comeback.”
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Mexican federal government announced it would ease restrictions on hundreds of counties starting on May 18 and move to gradually reopen the rest of the country on June 1. The announcement covers 15 states and include places with no confirmed coronavirus cases in the counties as well as neighboring counties. In addition, three major Mexican states on the U.S. border, Chihuahua, Coahuila, and Nuevo Leon, are cleared to fully reopen on June 1. U.S. businesses with manufacturing facilities and suppliers in Mexico urged the Mexican government to ease its restrictions, warning of potential supply chain disruptions.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Trump headed to Allentown, Pa., on May 14 to tour a medical equipment distributor.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Trump administration is moving to extend its coronavirus border restrictions indefinitely. On March 21, the CDC imposed a 30-day restriction on all non-essential travel into the United States from Mexico and Canada, which was extended for another 30 days on April 20. A new order is currently under review and once issued by Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) Director Dr. Robert R. Redfield, the border restrictions would stay in effect until he decides the virus no longer poses a threat.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump plans to name Moncef Slaoui, the former head of GlaxoSmithKline’s vaccines division, and Gustave Perna, a four-star U.S. Army general, to lead a Manhattan Project-style effort to develop a vaccine for COVID-19. Slaoui and Perna will oversee the initiative, known as “Operation Warp Speed,” with a goal to produce 300 million doses of a COVID-19 vaccine by the end of 2020 by testing many different vaccine candidates and starting production before the vaccines complete clinical trials.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> President Donald Trump addressed the nation's testing capabilities from the White House Rose Garden during an afternoon briefing on May 11. The briefing revealed the Administration’s plan to help states test at least 2% of their populations during May, amounting to at least 12.9 million tests, according to Brad Smith, director of the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Innovation. To meet this goal, the federal government is providing states with close to 13 million swabs and nearly 10 million tubes of chemicals used to transport testing samples. President Trump also revealed that the Administration plans to use a formula that considers a state’s number of infected citizens and total overall population to distribute the $11 billion from the CARES Act slated for state testing efforts.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> While Congress continues to build a “CARES 2” proposal, as of May 11 the White House sees action on another stimulus package bill being six to eight weeks away —although that timeline could change.

COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump is visiting Philadelphia later in the week of May 11 and plans to hold an event focused on highlighting the government’s preparations for a fall surge of COVID-19 cases. Part of that effort will begin at a 4 p.m. press briefing on May 11.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • ABA joined other food and consumer products trade groups today in sending a letter to Vice President Mike Pence asking for more guidance on the steps they should take as they prepare to reopen. You can read the letter here.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • In Oval Office remarks honoring nurses made on May 6, President Donald Trump reversed comments made earlier in the week about the Administration phasing out the White House’s coronavirus task force and shifting the efforts to individual departments and agencies. The President said he received numerous calls urging him to keep the group in place for the foreseeable future, but said two or three people would be added and an announcement would be made on May 11. He added a few people who had been involved in things such as procuring ventilators and building facilities for beds may take a lesser role.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • During the week of May 11, the House Energy and Commerce Committee will hear the testimony of Rick Bright, the former chief of the Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Agency. Bright filed a whistleblower complaint on May 5 .
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Donald Trump took part in a Fox News virtual town hall – “America Together: Returning to Work” – on the evening of May 3. He said the administration is not “doing anything” legislatively without a payroll tax cut and that he is “very confident” there would be a vaccine by the end of the year.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The White House’s 30-day social distancing guidelines expired April 30.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ CVS Health expects to have 1,000 testing locations capable of conducting 1.5 million tests per month fully operational by the end of May. Testing will be scheduled online and will occur in parking lots or in drive-thru windows, not in CVS stores.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Trump Administration notified Congress on April 24 that the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) will take effect on July 1.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump is expected to sign an Executive Order today blocking some individuals for 60 days from receiving a permanent residency visa or green card. However, the order will include exemptions, including visas for temporary employees, including farm laborers, a carve out for essential employees, including health care workers, and immigrants who come into the United States through immediate family members.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • President Trump announced late on April 20 that he plans to issue an Executive Order suspending immigration into the country. The Department of Homeland Security is still drafting the order; the parameters of this suspension are not yet clear.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The White House released an Executive Order on April 19 asserting the legal authority for Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) to defer duty payments. Additionally, CBP released guidance detailing the scope of the 90-day duty deferral, clarifying deferrals only apply to payment of Most Favored Nation (MFN) duties and importers must be experiencing “significant financial hardship” due to COVID-19.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and Office of Personnel Management (OPM) on April 20 released guidelines regarding reopening of the federal government, mirroring the three-phase national reopening guidelines. Agencies are encouraged to continue mandatory telework whenever feasible with agency needs before returning to optimized operations. The availability of hygiene supplies, maintenance of facility cleanliness, and ability to maintain social distancing to the extent practical should be considered.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On April 16, President Trump unveiled guidelines for “Opening Up America Again.” The guidelines provide governors and local leaders criteria – symptoms, cases and hospital capacity – and a phased approach to consider in deciding when and how to lift stay at home restrictions.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • On April 15, ABA joined the larger food and beverage industry in asking the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) to extend the compliance date for the National Bioengineered Food Disclosure Standard (NBFDS or rule). This extension is being sought because the food and beverage industry and regulatory agencies are necessarily focused on COVID-19 and unable to devote resources to new labeling schemes. COVID-19 Update: Federal Developments – Federal Government

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On April 8, President Trump unveiled a new hashtag to highlight Americans helping one another during the coronavirus pandemic. The President will use the #AmericaWorksTogether hashtag to promote companies that are hiring employees in the middle of the economic turmoil caused by COVID-19, as well as those who are donating food and other supplies to front line healthcare workers.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On March 29, President Trump extended the social distancing guidance to April 30.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> The implementation of the new North American trade pact – the U.S.–Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) – may be delayed past the June 1 deadline. Each of the three countries are due to exchange letters before April 1 certifying that they’ve met all their obligations needed for the deal to enter into force — namely, developing uniform standards for automotive rules of origin. If these letters are not exchanged on time, it could push overall implementation to mid-summer at the earliest. This delay is being attributed to COVID-19.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> At the request of the American Trucking Association, the Fraternal Order of Police sent a letter to the President requesting that truck drivers, truck stop and rest area workers, maintenance and repair technicians, dispatchers, towing/recovery and roadside assistance workers, warehouse workers, and intermodal transportation personnel be considered essential critical infrastructure workers for the duration of the COVID-19 pandemic. They urged that the guidelines defining essential critical infrastructure workers that were issued by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security be consistently applied by all State and local governments.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> On March 18, ABA sent a letter to the Trump Administration requesting specific actions to assist the industry and others in food and beverage manufacturing and distribution in operating their businesses effectively in order to meet critical needs during this national emergency. They include: essential services exemptions to ensure continuous delivery of essential services; federal action on truck weight restricts to deliver more essential goods; and clarification on hours of service guidance issued earlier this week by the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA). The letter was sent to targeted media outlets, all of which covered: Politico Influence Newsletter, Beverage Digest and BevNet.
